

Do Not Resuscitate Orders

Experts agree there is no question. Do Not Resuscitate (DNR) orders should be standard procedure for any one with certain conditions, such as advanced stage Alzheimer's disease. This is because resuscitation is a horrendous experience for someone with Alzheimer's disease. Less than 10% will survive the CPR effort, and almost all who do survive can be so severely injured by the process they will not recover. Unfortunately, they can expect to be even more impaired mentally as well. Consider the outlook for the specific conditions of your loved ones condition when making decisions about a Do Not Resuscitate Order.
